Personal, social, emotional development:

We are continuing to talk about "Our Emotions" by looking at the story How we feel, as part of Think Equal. These stories, which will be placed on the blog along with ideas for discussion, are part of your child's emotional and social development milestones so should be discussed as a life skills lesson. So click on the cover and enjoy.

Click on for your Phonics everyday at 10:20 am We will be starting with the letter (e). How many new words can you make with your phonics letter sounds?

Physical development

Parents I know how easy it is to limit your outdoor time due to the current situation but please try to encourage a healthy balance of outdoor activity to support your child in understanding the world around them. Simply exploring any open area around them letting them free encourage jumping, running, scootering, biking, dancing and just moving. It will most definitely help your child's concentration and large motor skills. For their fine motor skills try ( writing, cutting, tearing, taping, mixing, and threading) this will help your child with stamina and focus.

Reading and writing:

Bug club! The books on this site are all tailored to the level of our children. They are phonetical and children should be able Online reading is recommended everyday along with real books and reading to your child for pleasure
